Honekone, December 18th, 1874.

THE temperance movement, which has made | weather. such satisfactory progress in the North, appears to be making equally important strides in Hongkong. We are glad to learn that at present this Colony numbers about 200 peomembers of Good Templar Lodges, of shich policy. there are now two, which meet regularly. Adding to the latter the sailors from ships in the barbour, there are about three bundred Good Templars; and we hear that they are very anxious to have a Temperance Hall, established in the Colony, and that a subscription will shortly be opened for that purpose. We have no hesitation in recommending the scheme to the favourable consideration of the public, as the movement is one likely to work very great good. No doubt, temperance is preferable to otal abstinence but unfortunately it is only by the latter that a large number, who are most in want of some firmly adheres to some very weighty reasons the next of these three bars—and this particular ces, conduct their business among asily particular as at present constituted restraint of the kind, are accessible; and it is infinitely better that a mar should eschew alcoholic drinks altogether than that he should. indulge in them to excess. In Hongkong, in are very great. The Police Courts are constantly filled with cases of "drunks," and there can be no doubt that there is more than in almost any other part of the World. It is especially desirable that steps should be in a lamost any other part of the World in a lamost any other part of the World in a lamost any other part of the World in a lamost any other part of the World in a lamost any other part of the World in a lamost any other part of the world in a lamost any other part of the World in a lamost any other part of the World in a lamost any other part of the World in a lamost any other part of the World in a lamost any other part of the World in a lamost any other part of the World in a lamost any other part of the World in a lamost any other part of the world in a lamost any other part of the lamber of the Dallam Forge Company at Warrington, in Lancashire. He described in an atmost the Chamber, the Chamber is the Chamber, the Chamber, the Chamber is the Chamber in Lamost in the Chamber in common with most places in the sast the It is especially desirable that steps should be taken to keep sailors out of the way of temptation. They are a class of men peculiarly likely to be subject to the vice of drinking, and in a place like Hongkong, where they can obtain no rational amusement, are certain to flock into the grog shops, and there waste all their spare time and spare One of the chief causes the spread of intemperance among this class is the difficulty which those who are disposed to temperate habits have in getting clear of companions, who in one way and another, are constantly using their endenyours to induce them to join with them in their revels. If a man is compelled to go into their company he is soon prevailed upon by force of " chaff " to give over his scruples. Many men having educational advantages far beyond the reach of poor Jack are unable to muster the moral force to withstand banter of this description, and it is, therefore, not surprising if the sailers who are desirous of keeping clear of the temptations of drink, find it impossible to carry out their resolutions, so long as they have no place where they can obtain ordinary comfort and society, and be free from companions who indulge. For this reason it would be a great boom if there

So serious and devastating was the spread of the disease that e permanent, Phylloxera Committee was organized in the French Ac demy of Sciences: and at this time the vines of Portugal, Germany, Austria, and even in some slight measure of England, are suffering. There are two kinds of this insect, one called the gallecola, which is found in galls in the leaves; the other, the radicicola, found in awellings on the roots. The former of these cover the under-side of the leaves with galls, destroying the functions of the leaf; and if one of these galls be carefully opened. the mother is found at work surrounding herself with yellow eggs. She is about the 400th of an inch in length, and of a dull orange color. The eggs are hatched in about six or eight days, the young being more apparently perfect than the mother. These come out of the gall and spread themselves over the vine, and finding their way to the leaves suck the san. Soon a gall forms for each insect, which continue to grow and parthenogenetically deposits from two to five hundred fertile eggs, each of which originates a fertile female. Professor Reily, of America estimutes that the single product of a year would encirole the earth thirty times; if each individual touched the end of the other. But their ravages do not end here. In the antumn the dwellers in the galls descend to the couts, and there dwell in a sort of hibernsting condition. The newly batched radicicola very much recemble those just described that they are

THE INDIA TRADE.

The unprofitableness of Indian trade in the face of a steadily increasing total of the business done has of late been attracting much attention. With the Secretary of State publicly announcing that tenders for India Bills at the rate of ls. 10d. in London will be accepted in full, it is not difficult to lay one's finger on a tional state of things which has now been unfortunately the subject has an interest not confined to the mercantile part of the community. Every one of us has got to face the fact that anchifortunes as we may have accumulated or may hereafter accumulate in rupeea require a very aerious deduction before they can be converted into pounds s erling. The old convenient method of dividing by ten. and striking off the last figure in our bank-books, is no longer open to us. Ten thousand rupees baye ceased in any sense to represent £1,000, and so far as can be estimated at present, they wil never again be equivalent to that sum. Apart from temporary fluctuations in the exchange, a great set of influences are at work which must inevitably reduce the value of the rupes in the world's market. The European nations seem resolved, under one form or another, to extend the use of gold as the current metal. and to curtail the use of silver. Prussia is, of course, the country which enggests itself as the leading example of this change at present. But it is a change which is taking place among other continental nations besides the German Empire. and which; us their commercial intercourse in orenses, will sooner or later be accomplished throughout all the countries of the civilised world. The annual supply of gold is now inflicient to meet the material requirements of auch a development. As that development takes place, the demand for silver for the purones of currency will greatly decrease, while the demand for gold for the same purposes will increase. The relative value of the metala will alter accordingly, and the worth of the rupee as expressed in gold will diminish. If the only uses to which silver is nut were those of coinage, the effect on Indian fortunes would be of a most disastrous kind. But fortunately. they will not fail upon the Indian holder of silver with their full force. As silver s liberated from the purposes of coinage there is every reason to believe that it will be more extensively used in the arts and in the decorative manufactures of civilised nations. There is doubtless some consolution in this, and the consolation derives strength from the fact that the transfer of the currency from silver to gold, now going on in the currencies of Europe, an also marks a stage in the increase of wealth to England. It will be remembered that the Indian exchanges about eight per cent, and as a matter of fact, large same were remit ed to England last cold weather at the rate of le: 114d. Instead of the exchanges being ruinously low last January, as had been anticipated a few months previously, they were mitter. But a sudden and an unforescen based upon artificial causes, and the rush of affver into the Banks of Exchange brought it speedily to an end. At this moment, ten thousand rapees are worth about £900, instead January. It is quite within the limits of reasonable calculation to anticipate that they may be worth only £850 this time next year. India | cannot go on constantly borrowing money in The London to pay its current expenses. And it the whole same due from India in England next year are to be raised by Bills of Exchange on the Indian revenues, the results both to the mer cantile community here and to the private remitter will be most serious. SERBATIONAL SERMONS -A manuscript in the British Museum (Addl. 28,561) contains an account of the travels of a certain priest, named Torkington, who in the reign of Henry VIII. made the pilgrimage to Jerusalem. He reached " Cambery " on Holy Thursday, 1517, having passed with difficulty over "an ill and prevows mount callyd Mount Gabelyn." On the following morning, being Good Friday, he attended service, and "hard a ffamus," sermon of a Doctor." that they believed all necessary precaution had been taken, and they distinctly stated that the traffic, to be carried on at all must continue as heretofore. It is as well that the jury did not share with them these extraordinary opinions, especially since we learn the extent to which their practice of sending gunpowder and other goods in the same boats was carried on; we say " was," because they have ceased to carry gunpowder altogether. From a return furnished by them to the coroner at the request the Government inspector, it seems that during the three months immediately BRUSH CASES, LIQUEUR FRAMES preceding the accident seventy-five barges loaded with "gunpowder, paruffin, benzoline, naphtha, &c., were despatched from London along their canel—that is, an average of about one barge per working day. The total quantity of powder thus carried during this period amounted to 133 tone, the largest consignment being nine tons. This was stated to be about the average quantity carried for years past during a similar period of time; and this fact was apparently considered to be an argument in favour of the continuance of the present mode of transport. It is worthy of remark that, while no additional precautions were taken in the transport of gunpowder or other explosives, extra rates, amounting to about 100 per cent. increase on the ordinary charges, baveinvariably been demanded from the consignees. We have already referred on former occasions to the necessity for fresh legislation on the whole question of the manufacture, storage, and CHATEAU LAFITE, HAUT BRION, transport of explosive substances. The question was brought to the notice of Parliament as early as 1864 by the strong recommendations of the jury on the celebrated Erith explosion, and again in the following year by Lieutenant-Colonel (now General) Boxer in his report on guppowder mills and mag zines. It has been Governments during the past three years. We

If stringent regulations of a patronal order could ensure everybody's good behaviour, the denizens of Old London ought to have betaken themselves to their nightly rest, sure of slumbering undisturbed. To blow a horn or to whistle a tune out of doors after nine o'clock at night entailed imprisonment for the offender: and any man so lost to decency as to beat his wife or servant, causing thereby a sudden outcry in the still of the night, was liable to be fined three shillings and Sourpence for indulging in that amusement at an unreasonable time. Decent people, who rose at dawn, dined at nine in the morning. and supped at five in the afternoon, were expected to go to bed at curiew; so, while every bonest citizen was required to haug ontside his house a lantern "with a candle in it "-dishonest ones being by implication allowed to keep their doorways dark-his liability that way only lasted from six to nine. After that hour the streets were surrendered to darkness, with the natural consequence of making London a somewhat unpleasant abiding-place for folks who had anything to lose, since their houses were in danger of being plundered by strong ruffian bands, there being no police to say them par; these minions of the noon finding their vocation so | Agents for the above Company, are pregrofitable that when one of them happened pared to accept risks against Fire at ourrent to get caught he was able to bid five hundred | rates, subject to a bonus of 20 per cent. pounds of silver for his life. HOW TO PRESERVE THE TEETH: The strength and health of the teeth are frequently in proportion to the health and strength of the system. But to allow decay to commence and not stay at once its ravages with all their dire train of evils-toothache dyspepsia, irritability, low spirits, &c. is a Mutual Neglect Society established between the parent and the child. However naturaly artificial teeth may be made, and however clever is their mechanical substitution, we suppose everybody would prefer a good set of natural teeth to false ones; and if it were known what is necessary to secure this in most cases, the dentist would be familiar to every household. His business would begin when the second teeth appear. He would prevent their overlapping, remove extras, and secure regularity. Then they would require overlingling once a year, though each year there would be less to be done. The first appearance before the dentist is very often when carles has set in, when there in an accumulation of turtar caused by gum. And then extraction, cuiting off, or machinery would render the type useless. White teeth would be positively ugly, and one to make it after the same standard. We read once in a while of a wonderful piece of cabinet work, or mospic work, containing ten, to the teeth.
